

Jo-Ann Mathon, francophone, lesbian and mother of three adult-ish children, is a French Immersion high school teacher for York Region District School Board. Although she has taught elementary for more than 15 years, since 2010 she has found her groove in the secondary panel! She loves teaching grade 10 History, grade 11 Intro to the Social Sciences and grade 12 Contemporary Indigenous Issues and Perspectives in a Global Context. She hails from North Bay, where both her parents were active in their respective unions - mother in OSSTF and father in OPSEU. Her colleagues have often describe her as a fierce feminist and passionate union supporter. Jo-Ann has been advocating for education workers since the start of her career, in 1992, being elected as school rep and local executive member for the federation and unions to which she has belonged. Being selected as part of this writing team is definitely a highlight in her career and wishes to thank OSSTF for this leadership opportunity.
